

An easy way to build

Build smarter with Parkwood Homes

WITH A trend away from traditional brick-and-tile construction, designers are seeking construction methods to take advantage of the new innovative materials now being introduced into the Australian housing market.

Due to the ever-increasing cost of onsite construction, the responsibilities of Occupational Health and Safety compliance and cost demands to design environmentally efficient housing, the construction methods developed by Parkwood make excellent sense.

Within the Parkwood complex, construction methods have been refined. All homes are constructed under cover so wet weather is no longer a consideration. Smart material handling, dry storage and construction areas, and a consistent, experienced work force are good foundations for any project.

These new methods suit today's style of construction and the design options are unlimited. The Conder, designed with the holiday/weekender market in mind, is one of the new homes open for inspection at Parkwood's Somersby factory display yard.

With its sweeping roof line and wide eaves, the open-plan, two-storey, three bedroom home is very cleverly designed. Featuring an optioned-up kitchen, space-saving laundry under the staircase and a barbecue/bar area at either side of a large deck for entertaining, the residence makes the most of its beautiful outlook.

Of course, the real beauty of Parkwood residences is that they can be built, transported and erected in a matter of weeks after an order is placed. Complete with all its inclusions such as carpets, floor coverings of your choice, kitchens, bathrooms, tiling, lighting, plumbing and curtains, 'The Conder' really is a terrific example of the endless possibilities that are offered in this style of building. And best of all, 'The Conder' and other homes in the Parkwood range remain realistically priced.

Peruse this home and many other new displays at the Somersby factory. The displays are open Monday to Friday and Saturdays by appointment. +
